

Abstract of the Disclosure

According to an embodiment of the present invention, a method is presented for controlling a video image compression system. In this method a video frame of raw video image data is compressed using a processor. Then it is determined whether the processor is limited in its ability to compress video image data. Then, a target frame rate is adjusted based on a current 5 amount of time taken to compress said video frame of raw video image data.

SJ1-14016v2